RECESSION? PREPARING RETAIL ASSETS FOR 2020

By Cory Dulberg, Retail Broker, NAI Shames Makovsky

The Denver retail market is hot! When is it going to cool off? This is what Denver retail landlords are asking their brokers as we near 2020.

From my institutional retail clients, to local ownership groups, a question I get the most these days is, "The economy in Denver is booming, how long is it going to last, and what does this all mean for my retail asset?" My response to this question includes several factors, starting with a look at the current state of the local and national economy.

Denver has been riding the same economic surge that our country has been on for the last 10 years. As of July 2019, U.S. economic growth became the longest in history, hitting its 121st consecutive month of expansion, according to a report from Metro Denver Economic Development Corporation.

Our city has consistently outperformed the national average for both employment and population growth over the past 10 years. As an example, between May 2018 and May 2019, employment in Colorado rose 1.8 percent, adding 48,200 workers and the national level employment increased over the same period by 1.5 percent.

Denver has been on the radar as a top market nationwide and is no longer an emerging market. Denver has emerged. When discussing the Denver market with retailers, I no longer need to try and convince them that Denver is not a cow town. I tell them to come put their boots on the ground in Denver and let the city's energy speak for itself.

Record amounts of capital continue to be placed into the Denver market from national and international investors. Job growth, in-bound migration, and the expansion of Denver's urban transit system are all major contributing factors.

Looking at future forecasts, most economists indicate that the U.S. will begin to enter a recession at some point during 2020. Predictions of upcoming economic slowdown vary widely and are subject to international tariffs, geo-political pressures, potential domestic interest rate fluctuation, and uncertain national employment growth.

How will this impact Denver's retail market? Undoubtedly, Denver will have the same recessionary pressures that the rest of the country will experience, but I predict it will be less dramatic than some of the secondary markets in the country. Denver's economic fundamentals remain very strong.

There are other factors Denver retail landlords should consider as we approach 2020.

Tenant Mix, Exposure, Saturation

Landlords should be aware of their retail tenant mix and be cognizant of the exposure they may have should a recession occur. Denver, like other major markets, has experienced rapid expansion of retail tenants in fitness, food and beverage, and entertainment. Denverites have no lack of these options. If someone has enough energy, every day of the week a Denver resident could choose to workout at a different boutique gym, dine and drink with friends at one of our many award-winning restaurants, bars, and breweries, and then head to an exciting entertainment venue to end the night, without repeating retail vendors. That's incredible!

However, in some trade areas throughout Denver, category saturation is becoming apparent. Not all these concepts will weather the slow-down as well as others. Heavy category competition and poor operations will expose a retailer's weaknesses. As a result, landlords with these types of tenants need to be more alert to gross occupancy costs relative to tenant sales, as well as their tenants' credit/balance sheets. Which types of tenants are in your retail asset?

Product Type and Location

Top performing anchored suburban assets, sites located within the urban core, as well as transit-oriented sites, will fare better than unanchored suburban strip centers, which will be most impacted. These assets continue to reinforce the daily customer traffic generation that is more critical than ever for a retailer's success. Leasing activity and vacancy levels in Denver reflect this. To achieve high occupancy levels, unanchored suburban strip centers will be further forced to rely on tenants with lower credit, discounted rent, or seek alternative nontraditional retail uses such as office/community space. What kind of retail asset do you have?

Internet and E-Commerce

The internet and e-commerce will not be the detriment of all retail. There is no doubt that retail, similar to co-working in the office market, is evolving. Restaurants are steeped in competition with online food delivery to see who can deliver food the fastest to the consumer. Grocery stores are under the same pressure. Those retailers that can provide speed, quality, and an amazing customer experience will continue to be successful, despite the internet. The gap of those that do not adjust to our changing retail climate will continue to widen. How are your retail tenants adjusting to this change?

As we get closer to 2020 and begin to experience potential economic headwinds, keep these factors in mind. I predict the Denver retail market will continue to shine but its retail landlords should be observant and prepared for whatever level of recession we may experience. Are you prepared?

While hard to imagine, the Shames Makovsky Property Management Team has begun preparing 2020 Operating Budgets for the properties that we manage.

The budgeting process is quite involved and there are numerous considerations that go into preparing a budget. Far before the income and expense data is entered into our system, the following items need to be addressed:

On the revenue side:

• All existing leases that expire in the coming year need to be analyzed with the leasing staff to arrive at budget assumptions which address whether or not the tenant is projected to renew its lease and what are the projected rental rates, tenant finish costs, commission expenses and any lease concessions. A similar analysis needs to be done to arrive at realistic projections for any new leases anticipated at the property.

On the expense side, the property manager must:

- Work with their existing vendors to obtain information concerning proposed rate increases as well as the need to increase or decrease each individual service provided at the property.
- Talk with the property's insurance agent and property tax appeal groups to target those expense figures for the upcoming year.

- Carefully inspect the property and work with key vendors (roofers, HVAC companies, landscapers, asphalt/concrete vendors, etc.) to insure that capital improvement projects needed in the upcoming year are properly budgeted. This process will address repairs and capital improvements on an immediate, short-term, and long-term basis.
- Review the property's debt structure (if applicable) as it is important to note if the mortgage's interest rate, amortization or impound structure adjusts in the upcoming year.
- Analyze funds projected to be distributed to ownership which is the culmination of the income and expense items listed above.

This data is needed in order to compute expense pass-thru amounts to tenants and the calculation of management and asset management fees. Internally, every budget is carefully reviewed by the property manager as well as the property management accounting team and property management controller.

Once our internal review is complete, the budget is ready to be presented to the property owner for discussion, review, analysis and any final adjustment. Once finalized, the budget is ready for final approval by the property owner and our property management team then prepares to implement the budget on January 1st.

Budgeting is a very detailed and important operational process and is a valuable tool for property ownership and management and serves as a key guideline to assess and measure a property's performance.
